ELECTRICIAN WORK

Residential Electricians : Residential electricians install, maintain and upgrade electrical equipment in apartments and houses. They may also install outdoor landscape lighting. Training combines formal classroom instruction with an apprenticeship which usually involves at least four years of work under the supervision of experienced electricians. A residential electrician must pass rigorous state testing at the end of the apprenticeship program.

Commercial Electricians : Commercial electricians work on construction sites, in commercial buildings and on mechanical electrical systems. Most commercial electricians perform some installation work, which may involve water heaters, commercial security systems and electronic key systems. They also complete system upgrades and troubleshoot systems to isolate problems caused by faulty wiring. Before licensing, a potential commercial electrician must work under a master electrician. Standards are stringent because commercial electric work can affect public safety.
